

I believe the FCC has gone too far with television and trying to regulate it. I understand governing free airwaves, but trying to press on to cable? What else will he have left to watch? There are more teenagers out there watching TV probably than older adults, I know the adults are watching out for what's best for their children, but their children aren't the ones watching CSI, and other prime-time TV shows. It's teenagers, and those teenagers are mature enough to understand what they're watching. Unlike children who just want to watch shows (cartoons, etc.) such as Pokemon and other very nonviolent shows. In my very humble opinion the FCC is pushing civil rights to what we can watch and it's very unconstitutional.
